

The FCC's job is to fairly govern the telecommunications bandwidth and resources licensed by 'We the People' on behalf of 'We the People', administering the licenses granted to the willing corporations and organizations providing these expected 'common carrier' services to 'We the People'. The FCC's duty is to 'We the People', not to cave in to the demands of giant corporate interests eager to end Net Neutrality, just to placate their elite shareholders--keeping the ownership classes ecstatic, while tossing aside the interests, freedoms and agendas of all US citizens, and really that of the whole world. We don't want the AT&T or Comcast filtered and shaped versions of the internet. Our corporate giants are already paid quite well and earn many billions for their common carrier services, with our US consumers often paying double or treble the fees for broadband ISP services than citizens of Europe, Japan, or other 1st world nations. They are also happily taking in! billions paid by the businesses, organizations and individuals buying their ISP hosting bandwidth and services. 'We the People' license, expect and deserve the whole internet, unfiltered and fairly allocated, fully supportive of all free speech, enabling benefit for all, with no games played with throttling, without filtering or blackout exclusions, especially exclusions based on 'exclusive financial arrangements' or political interests that put one point of view or interest ahead of the rest of us, and especially those which only represent those of our already giant, fat and sassy corporations and the elite wealthy 1% class. The FCC must first and foremost must stick up for ALL our interests, the interests of citizens 'We the People', and not capitulating to greedy demands of giant corporations hoping to implement narrowed agendas for their own benefit. It is 'We the People' who have, via government, created this common carrier environment, who funded it's creation and!

continued operations, and, most importantly, it is 'We the People' who

o LICENSE it to service providers, with the FCC governing these licenses on OUR behalf, to ensure the fair provision of services we expect. It is really all OUR public property, not the exclusive property of AT&T or Comcast or Verizons or their shareholders--they license and operate the common carrier franchise on OUR behalf. This precious resource needs to be carefully governed by the FCC so that it is fairly, fully and transparently accessible on our behalf for our behalf, to further the essential causes of all our freedom and to increase the knowledge of all our citizens as a critical necessity to function as a thriving democracy, and to support our free, unfettered, unfiltered market of ideas, services, and work products. Any curtailment of this is a blatant betrayal of American ideals and all our citizens. Abolishing or even limiting Net Neutrality would be an unfair restriction of all our 1st Amendment rights, and it would be manipulated by the few wealthy against !

the 99% of us, for their own greed and political power. If the FCC fails to hold our common carriers fully accountable for providing this licensed internet environment under a true requirement for Net Neutrality, and if the FCC fails to act to protect the availability of this whole internet on behalf of all citizens, then the FCC would be failing and betraying the interests of all of Americans, especially to the 99% of citizens who need it most, and caving in on Net Neutrality will indeed cause the rest of the world to suspect the worst of the USA's motives, and instead of the USA being a shining beacon of freedom, justice and opportunity for all, they'll see that 'beacon' as throttled and controlled on behalf of and for the benefit of the 1% wealthy elite. Once our nation's reputation is so tarnished, it will be very hard to recover, and if it possibly could be, it would only be within an environment of untrusting cynicism, eagerly awaiting our next corporate-government !

corruption scandal. We don't need to give our global competit!

ors, and

the totalitarian and restrictive nations yet another powerful excuse to control information and markets against our interests. If the FCC fails to enforce Net Neutrality, what is left for 'We the People' but to resort to expensive Anti-Trust Law prosecutions and petitioning government for redress? Keep these common carrier services and this amazingly rich world of the internet fairly provided, on the level, fully transparent, unthrottled, and working for ALL of us, for the behalf of ALL of us, as befitting an agent of government responsible for administering this public resource for ALL of us. If AT&T, Comcast, et al, don't like it, they are free to surrender their licenses. I'm sure there are communication companies all over the world who'd eagerly step up to do it the way we specify. The FCC's job is to be 100% loyal to 'We the People'. Please don't let us down. Our future and that of future generations is at stake.

Be vigilant for the interests of all of us, not !

just a few stockholders. It's their job to figure out how to be financially and operationally successful, not the FCC's. The FCC must uphold and enforce this critical contract with America, and compel our common carriers to fulfill their license requirements, and be a vital arm helping to keep all America free, strong, and prosperous.
